The Preface.

SEing Precedents and former Practices of other Nations, followed with ſo great Succeſs, and the imitation of others, ſtill confirmed by the Experiences of all, can be more able to perſwade to the like Induſtry and Virtue, for the Wealth, Glory, and Strength of our Nation, than any new thing when propoſed; I have only Re-printed the following Diſcourſe, whereby the Author in thoſe days, by ſeveral Arguments of Utility and Conveniency, as well privat as publick, moſt elegantly animats the French to ariſe and beſtir themſelves more vigorouſly to a Reviving of Trade, and enlarging their Commerce: Adjudging ſeveral Advantages to the French, above all other People in the VVorld, from their Ports, their Veſſels, their experienced Sea-men, with ſo many brave Souldiers, their Product, and laſtly their King.

But in all theſe we abound and excell many Nations, except in ſhipping, which may ſoon be increaſed, We have Ports and Harbours almoſt every where, and eſpecially in the weſt Coaſt, which fronteth the Ocean, with an eaſie inlet and outlet of Shipping from the River Clyde, and a ſhorter paſſage by 200 Leagues to thee Southward and Weſtward, bound Voyages for Affrica eaſt or weſt Indies, with many Lochs and Harbours without Barrs and Banks, wherein many Ships may ly ſafely waiting for a Wind, beyond what England, France, or Holland hath. And for experienced Seamen, and brave Soldiers Scotland ſuperabounds, as is evidenced by the Supply the Engliſh, and Dutch Fleets have at preſent, being computed to no leſs than Ten, if not 15000 Sailers, and upwards of 30000 land Forces, if not 40000, Firſt and Laſt during this War. And lately there was 10000 Scots Merchants and Pedlers going up and down England, Selling Cloth, and above 50000 Scots Inhabiters in Ireland, yea, in My Lord Granad's time were computed to 100000 Scots young and old, I may alſo reckon many thouſands of Scots, that are Planters ſettled, and otherways Servants in America, and Weſt-indies, beſides other places of the World, yea, ſome we had in Affrica and Eaſt-Indies, who raiſed their Fortunes, yet ſtill we have been hitherto advancing our Neighbours, but ſecured no Colonies, or Settlement for our ſelves. As Hewers of Wood, and Drawers of Water.

Scotland hath ſuitable Product to carry on a Trade to Affrica and Weſt-Indies, ſuch as all ſorts of VVooling and Linen Manufactories, Beaff for ſalting, and all other Proviſions for Shipping, or Tranſporting for ſale. VVe have all ſorts of Fiſhes, as Salmond, white and red Herrings, Ling and Cod-fiſh, Coal, and Salt, with Lead, and and many other Metals, all ſuitable Product for moſt of Kingdoms about us; for which we can procure what other Commodities we want.

And now after ſo long athirſting of ſome for ſuch a Golden Opportunity as we find from ſo Gracious a King as we now enjoy, who far excelleth all the Lewiſes in France for Heroick Magnanimity, true Vertue, Juſtice and Clemency, all which are Concentered in his Sacred Perſon, ſhining forth in his Glorious Acts and Atchievements, who after he hath (under God) delivered Britain and Ireland, reſts not ſatisfied, until his Victories be Crowned by the general Peace of Europe.

What then ſhould hinder this Nation being made more Famous and Formidable, Abroad and at Home: If our Trade and Navigation were Increaſed and Encouraged, For by Gods bleſſing, you ſee we are wanting for nothing, ſeing his Grace His Majeſties High Commiſſioner, and the Honourable Eſtates of Parliament, have ſo chearfully concurred to make us happy by ſo good a Law and patent granted in our Favours, which will be recorded to their praiſe, but to our perpetual ſhame if not Improven. Therefore chuſe faithful and grave Men for Directors and Managers that have longeſt experience, as well of loſſes as profit, that can huſband and ſave, and not multiply needleſs expenſes; that are of no Private but Publick and generous ſpirits advancing mainly the Common-good of the Company in general hating all ſelfiſh and by deſigns of their own. We are happy in that we want not ſome worthy Country-men Abroad, who are of long Experience and Improvements and fit perſons, both for the help and honour of their own Country.

To the Treatiſe above-mentioned, there are likewiſe annexed the Articles and Conditions themſelves, as they were preſented to the French King at Fountain Bleau, where they received the Royal Sanction, and were furth with Imprinted at Paris, and the Reader may take further notice, that the French Kings allowances are inſerted in ſmall Print under every Article.

If the Re-printing of this be acceptable, I have another with the Conditions granted by the Statas of Holland, for ſettling a Collonie, in a convenient place, on the Main Continent of America, which ſhall be Re-printed, but the Tranſlation of it from Dutch into Engliſh, is not yet perfected.

By a True Lover of Trade.

A Diſcourſe

A Discourse Writen by a Faithful Subject to His Christian Majesty, concerning the Establishment of a French Company, for the Commerce of the East-Indies.

Dedicated to the Whole French Nation.

AS it is a Matter of great Reputation, and Security to any State, to have a People trained up in the Knowledge and Exercise of Arms; so is it of great Utility, and Convenience, that they likewise addict themselves to Commerce, by which means the benefits of the whole World are brought Home to their own doors: Beside that by this Employment alone, are acquired the two Things which Wise Men accompt of all Others, the most Necessary to the well being of a Common Wealth: That is to say a general Industry of Mind, and Hardiness of Body, which never fail to be accompanyed with Honour and Plenty. So that questionless, where Commerce does not flourish, as well as other Professions, and where Particular Persons out of a Habit of Lazyness, neglect at once the Noblest way of Employing their times, and the fairest occasions of Advancing their Fortunes, That Kingdom though otherwise never so Glorious wants something of being Compleatly happy. But in truth, it is with Commerce, as with the Liberal Sciences, that Man or State, that would improve either of them, must be at Quiet; Peace being the same thing to a Community, which Tranquillity of Mind is to each Individual. What can be more Importune, or Unseasonable then in the middle of a Warr either Foreign, or Intestine' when every Man's Duty calls upon him to defend his Country; for People to be Undertaking of long Voyages, and Transporting themselves into Remote Parts, their Principal Obligation and Business lying at Home! In such a Case as this, He that absents himself from his Country, is in Construction a Desertor of it, and turns that, which at another time, were an Honest, and Laudable desire of Benefit, into a Criminal Avarice. The Broyles and Troubles of France for these Hundred Years and upwards, are so well known, that to tell the Story, were but needlessly to revive the Memory of these Misfortunes, which we must strive to forget. It shall suffice therefore to Note, that the State of France, having scaped so many Tempests, and Rocks, was yet once again emplunged in a Civil Warr at the Beginning of the Last Kings Reign, upon the point of Religion, which Affair being happily determined, and the People Reduced to their Obedience, without any Violence, either to their Liberties, or Consciences; there succeeded an Obligation to Engage in a Contest with Strangers, which proved to be one of the longest Wars, that has been known in France since the Foundation of This Monarchy: And tho the Justice of the Cause, the Valour of the Prince, and the Wisdom of his Counsel, have never failed of being attended with Victory; Yet certain it is, that these Advantages have not been obtained without Infinite Care and Labour throughout the whole Body of the State. So that it is no wonder, if the French having so much to do at Home, look'd but little Abroad; Especially, into the Business of Navigation and Traffique, wherein our Neighbours in the Interim, terim have beſtowed ſo much ſtudy, and diligence; and from whence they have likewiſe reaped ſo much Reputation and Profit. Some Private Enterprizes indeed have been ſet on foot, and without that Succeſs, which the Undertakers promiſed to themſelves: But this will not appear ſtrange at all, if we conſider, that the greater Part of the Adventurers, having other Affairs, wherein they were more nearly Concerned, during our Troubles, did neither vigorouſly purſue what they had begun, nor indeed ſo much as take the pains to keep the Frame of their Deſign in Order. But now that it has pleaſed God to give France the Peace it has ſo long deſired, and the enjoyment of that Peace under the Government of a Prince, whoſe wiſe Conduct, and ſteady Application to Buſineſs are at once the Wonder, and the Jealouſie of all Europe: Now I ſay, for our Country-men not to put themſelves forward toward the Recovery of a Right, which they can never looſe, and toward the gaining to themſelves, of thoſe ineſtimable Benefits, which their Neighbours receive, by the Settlement of a glorious Commerce, were to adminiſter juſt reaſon of Aſtoniſhment.

Now of all Commerces whatſoever throughout the whole World, that of the Eaſt-Indies is One of the moſt Rich and Conſiderable. From thence it is (the Sun being kinder to them, than to us,) that we have our Merchandize of greateſt Value, and that which Contributes the moſt, not only to the Pleaſure of Life, but alſo to Glory and Magnificence. From thence it is, that we fetch our Gold and Precious Stones, and a Thouſand other Commodities, (both of a General Eſteem, and a Certain Return) to which we are ſo accuſtomed, that it is impoſſible for us to be without them, as Silk, Cinamom, Pepper, Ginger, Nutmegs, Cotton, Clothes, Ouate (vulgarly Watting) Pourcelain, Woods for Dying, Ivory, Frankinſence, Bezoar, &c. So that having an absolute Neceſſity upon us, to make uſe of all theſe things, why we ſhould not rather furniſh Our ſelves, than take them from Others, and apply that Profit hereafter to our own Countrey-men, which we have hitherto allowed to Strangers, I cannot underſtand. Why ſhould the Portuguez, the Hollanders, the Engliſh, the Danes Trade daily to the Eaſt-Indies poſſeſſing there, their Magazins, and their Forts; and the French neither the One, nor the Other? What does it ſignifie to us, that we have for many good Ports, and Veſſels, ſo many Experienced Seamen, ſo many brave Souldiers? To what end is it in fine, that we Pride our ſelves to be Subjects of the Prime Monarch of the Univerſe: If being ſo, we dare not ſo much as ſhew our Heads in thoſe Places where our Neighbours have eſtabliſhed themſelves with Power? Were it not in a manner better for us to be without theſe Advantages than not to uſe them, and to reſt where we are, for want of Ability to go further, than for want of Reſolution? Would it not be a Shame to us, to make a difficulty of Attempting that in a State of Security, which other People have carryed on through all doubts, and hazards? And to ſtick at the bare Croſſing of thoſe Seas, which others ventured upon, even before they were known? Is it, that we lack either Induſtry, to make uſe of their Inventions, or Courage, to follow their Example? Would we have any thing more eaſie, than to reap the fruits of other Mens Travels: or any ſtronger Aſſurance of a good Event, than the Wealth and Glory which they enjoy, that have tryed the Experiment.

True it is, that there is is a certain Glory, which is ſo Inſeparable from the Inventors of things, that it is entirely theirs without any poſſibility of Communication. The Portuguez will be for ever Famous for their Diſcoveries in the Eaſt, and even their Kings themſelves think it no diſhonour, to be thought the firſt Projectors of that Enterprize. They ſay, that that in the Year 1420. Henry Duke de Viſeo, Son of King John the firſt; being eminently skill'd in the Mathematicks, took up a ſtrong Perſwaſion, that there muſt be of neceſſity more Iſlands in that Ocean, than were yet known, and ſo ſent out certain Veſſels upon the ſearch, which diſcovered the Iſle of Madera: After which, others ſailing along the Coaſt of Affrica, made new Diſcoveries. This Deſign, that had been ſo luckily ſet afoot, was however interrupted by the Wars, during the Reigns of Edward the Succeſſor of John the Firſt, and of Alphonſus: but John the Second, who ſucceeded Alphonſus, (in perſuance of his Predeceſſors Beginnings,) ſent out One Bartholomew Diaz in 1487. to skirt the whole Coaſt of Affrtca, and He it was, that firſt doubled the Cape of Good-Hope; to which at firſt he gave the Name of Cabo Tormentoſo, becauſe of the Storms, which are frequent thereabouts. And this Name perchance would have continued, if the King himſelf had not thought fit to Change it for One of a better Omen, (the Cape of Good-Hope,) which was grounded upon the Hope he had, that this new Progreſs would open a way to the Conqueſt of the Oriental Indies, an Acquiſition, which he thirſted for, with exceeding Paſſion. Yet before he would venture his Shipping into ſo vaſt a Sea, divers Perſons were ſent by Land to the Indies, to inform themſelves from the beſt Pilots of the Country, in order to the Voyage; But King John Dying upon the Preparative, left the Conſummation of this great Work to his Succeſſour Emanuel, who having ſufficiently Inſtructed himſelf, as to the carrying of it foreward, diſpatched away four Veſſels from Lisbon in July 1497. under the Command of Vaſco de Gama, who in May following Arrived before Calicut, having doubled the Cape of Good-Hope, notwithſtanding the Storms he met with; and the Violent Importunities of his People, preſſing him to return. After two Years Abſence, he brought the

the News himself of his Prosperous Voyage, and laid the Foundation of greater Hopes to come. In the Year following, the King sent thither again 14 Ships, under the Charge of Pedro Alvarez, and after that, divers other Fleets to secure and fortifie themselves in a Place, where they found so vast a Treasure; and thus it came to pass, that when the King of Castile seized upon all the New Lands, upon the West, the Portuguez did the same in the East, and this was it, that gave Occasion to the Famous Partition made by Pope Alexander the Sixth, who drawing an Imaginary Line from one Pole to the other, (to pass at a Hundred Leagues from the Asores) Adjudged to the King of Castile all that which was one the West-side of the Line; not meddling with any of these Establishments, which the King of Portugal had upon the East, which since the Voyage of Vasco de Gama, have been infinitly increased. Thus did the constant Resolution of these Princes surmount all Difficulties; bringing both Glory to themselves, and Happiness to their Subjects. Thus did these new Argonouts address themselves to the Conquest of the real Golden Fleece: for in fine, the Portuguez are indebted to this Navigation for almost all they are worth. This it is, that has made them Famous in the World, and raised them into an Eminent Reputation, although One not only of the smallest, but of the least Fruitful Kingdoms of Europe. It is this Traffick, (which they have now been sole Masters of a Hundred Years entire) that has put them in Condition to carry so high the Undertakings which we have seen in our days, and they would find it a very hard Matter to Cope, even with the Enemy at their Gates, if it were not, that the inexhaustible Source of their Indian Treasure, and Trade from time to time supplies them, for the Expence of so long, and so dangerous a Warr.

What has it been, but this very Navigation, and Traffick, that that has enabled the Hollanders to bear up againſt the Power of Spain, with Forces ſo unequal; Nay, and to become terrible to them, and to bring them down at laſt to an Advantagious Peace? Since that time it is, that this People, who had not only the Spanyards, Abroad; but the very Sea, and Earth at Home to ſtruggle with, have in a deſpite of all Oppoſition made themſelves ſo Conſiderable, that they begin now to diſpute Power, and Plenty, with the greateſt parts of their Neighbours. This Obſervation is no more then Truth, their Eaſt-India Company being known to be the Principal ſupport of their State, and the moſt ſenſible Cauſe of their Greatneſs. In the mean while, who would have imagined that the Union of a few particular Merchants, that but in 1595. bethought themſelves of the very Project, and did not form this Grand Company till ſix or ſeven Years after, ſhould ever have raiſed them to that point of Opulence, where they now ſtand? It is known, that Communibus annis, there has been yearly 30, or 35 per Cent. clear Gain to the Sharers; and it is an eaſie Matter likewiſe, to make a near Calculation of their Occaſional Expences, and yet all this deducted, when they came to make a General Computation of the Eſtate of the Company, in the Year 1661 Reckoning what they might have in ready Caſh, in Merchandize, the value of their Shipping, Cannon, and what thereunto belongs, the Eſtimate upon the whole, amounted to a Sum ſo Prodigious, that it almoſt exceeds all poſſibility of Credit; Not accompting all this while, that this Company poſſeſſes more Land in the Indies, than the States of Holland have in the Low Countries; and this is it, that maintains for them fourteen, or fifteen Thouſand Souldiers, to make good what they have got, beſide Sea-men, and other People, which they employ up and down, to the number of near four ſcore Thouſand Perſons, all ſubſiſting thereupon. So vaſt

an encreaſe of Wealth from ſo ſmal a Beginning would paſs abſolutely for Fabulous, if we did not both See, and Know, that at this day the Hollanders are the beſt monied People of Europe, and that in their Country, an Inheritance is worth more than in any other part of the World: An Eſtate in Fee commonly Selling there at 60 years Purchaſe, and Lands in Soccage, at 50; Whereas Money goes but at Three per Cent. (ſo much it is Cheaper than other Goods:) And this does not proceed I hope, from the Improvement of their drained Marſhes into Paſturage; nor from the Culture of their other Grounds (which are certainly none of the beſt) but barely from their Traffique, and chiefly from that of the Eaſt-Indies.

About the ſame time with the Hollanders, did the Engliſh likewiſe adviſe upon the ſame deſign, and Formed a Company at London for the Eaſt India Trade. This Company ſet out Four Ships in the Year 1600, which ſucceeded ſo well, that in a ſhort ſpace of time, the Engliſh made twenty Voyages thither. This new Society was powerfully Protected, and Encouraged by His Majeſty of England, who 1608. ſent Sir William Hawkins in the Quality of Embaſſadour to the Great Mogol (to demand a Free-Trade) in deſpite of all the Obſtacles, which both the Portuguez, and the Hollanders endeavoured then to caſt in the way. In 1615, His Majeſty ſent Sir Thomas Roe, and after him other Embaſſadours to the Kings of Iapan upon the ſame Errand, who wrought ſo well upon the Humour of thoſe Barbarians, that they not only obtained their deſires, but gained ſo far upon the Affections of the People, that the Hollanders themſelves in Order to their better Welcome, would often pretend to be Engliſh men. This Company prevaileth alſo with the King of Perſia, for great Priviledges in his Territories, in Conſequence of the Service they did him againſt the Portuguez about the Siege of Ormus. But it had been well, if they had found him as juſt in the Execution, as he was Eaſie in the Promiſe. However, be it as it will, this Company has made it ſelf very Conſiderable in the Indies, and has at preſent diverſe Money-Tables under Two Principal Directors, or Preſidents; the One of which, has his Reſidence at Surat, the Other at Bantam, by whoſe Authority the Trade of thoſe Parts is Managed. Thus has the Induſtry and Valour of thoſe People, Eſtabliſht and Maintained their Commerce againſt all Oppoſition: and though their Enemies hath done their utmoſt to Cruſh their Deſign, and brought the Difference even to an open and Bloody War, they have gained nothing but ſhame upon the Conteſt, without ever being able to hinder their Courſe and Progreſs, which indeed they had no Colour at all to endeavour to Obſtruct.

The Danes it's truth, Manadge not ſo great a Trade in the Indies as the reſt; neither are their Fleets there ſo numerous; but ſome Concernment they have likewiſe in the Voyage, and their Agents upon the Place; and from time to time they ſend out Shipping thither: their Buſineſs lies commonly in the Gulf of Bengala, upon the Coaſt of Pegu, and in certain Iſles of the South, where they have rendred themſelves Conſiderable.

In fine, the Famous Guſtavus Adolphus King of Sueden, thought himſelf obliged, as upon a Point of Honour and Greatneſs, that His Subjects alſo ſhould Viſit the Oriental-Indies, and other Parts of the World; and in the very Inſtant, that this Prince (whoſe mind was ſet upon Dominion and Glory) was diſpoſing of his Deſign to enter Germany, and Contriving the Ruine of the Houſe of Auſtria, he had likewiſe in his Projects, the Forming of a Sueduſh Company for this great Navigation, inviting his People to Intereſt themſelves therein, as by his Letters-Patents, dated at Stockholm the 14th. of June, 1626, is made to appear;

but the War of Germany, and the Death of this Great Prince coming on ſoon after, would not permit him to ſee the Accompliſhment of this Deſign, which ſince that time has been again renewed.

All this Conſidered, what would the French Nation have to ſay for themſelves, if they ſhould now let ſlip the Opportunity of an Enterprize, that has rewarded all that have ever Embarqued in it, with Reputation, and Profit? If we have neglected it hitherto, it may ſerve for an Excuſe, that we have not been hitherto in Condition to attend it, by reaſon of our conſtant Troubles. But now that we are in a State of Tranquility, and Peace, what ſhall acquit us to Poſterity, if we deferr it any longer? It would be very ill done indeed, to envy our Neighbours, the Fruits of their Honeſt and Lawful Induſtry, but it would not be well on other ſide, to decline the ſame means of Enriching our ſelves, if it were but for the Converſation of our Common Good, the Benefites of Commerce, ſerving as a Recompenſe for Their Labour, and Travail, while the greater Part of Our People ly Lazing at Home, as of no Uſe, and without Employment.

But Men are not eaſily perſwaded to Engage upon new Adventures, they are afraid, that things will not prove to their minds, and every man is unwilling to make the firſt ſtep These thoughts doubtleſs might well enough have become the Portugeuz, that had a vaſt Sea before them, and were to paſs into another Climate, and under other Stars, without any knowledge of the Courſe they were to ſteer.

This Apprehenſion might have been pardoned alſo in the Hollanders, whoſe deſign lay in a Country, where their Mortal Enemies were Maſters, and where they were in more danger from the Portuguez, then either from Storms, or the Barbarians themſelves. But now that the former of theſe has led the way to this Fortunate Land, and the Latter has disabused us, as to any fear of Peril from those that were there before us, we must be willfully blind, not to agree upon an Advantage so certain upon the Accompt, and so easie to obtain. For whether France be more Potent, or not, then any other Nation, that Trades to the Indies is not the Question, neither can it be disputed, whether the French have not as good Commodity for this Traffique, as any other People, if it be considered, that we are possessed already beyond the Cape of Good-hope, of the Island of St. Laurence or Madagascar, the Largest Island of all that Sea, being no less than seven hundred Leagues in Compass, and in the most agreeable Climat, of all India. The Air is so Temperat: that the same Cloathes which we wear here in the Spring, may serve there the whole year through; and Experience tells us, that the Heats of France are more troublesom, than those of St. Laurence. The Soyle is proper for all sorts of Grain, and Trees, and askes nothing but dressing to be Admirable. There is no need of carrying Provisions thither, as to other Islands, for the support of the Colonyes; for the Abundance of every thing being so great, that the Countrey produces enough for it Self, and to Spare. The Waters are Excellent, the Fruits delicious, and without Hyperbole, the Place may be Improved into a Paradise. Over and above This, there are Golden-Mines, in such Plenty, that in great falls of Rain, and Ravages of Water, the Veins of Gold discover themselves all along the Coast, and upon the Mountains. The Inhabitants are of a Disposition tractable enough, and with good Usage ready and willing to be imployed in any Service, being a People Humble and Obedient, and of a Humour far differing from Those of the Countrey, and of the Islands further up in the Indies, who will not upon any Terms Subject themselves to Labour: Whereas these on the contrary, both love it themselves, and takes pleasure to see the Christians work.

The Country is ſhared among diverſe petty Kings, who are ſtill making War One upon the other, and from whoſe diſagreements we might eaſily take a Riſe to an abſolute Eſtabliſhment of our ſelves among them. Beyond this Place the Trading lyes open without difficulty into India China, Iapan, and more Commodiouſly yet to the Coaſts of Aethiopia, and Territories of the Emperour of the Abiſſins; (where Commerce is ſcarce underſtood (to Sofola; where are the Richeſt Gold-Mines upon the Face of the Earth, to Quama Melinda, to the Red Sea, and throughout the Perſian Gulph. In a word, there is not any where a fitter Place for a General Magazin of all Commodities, to be brought from thoſe parts into Europe, then is this Iſland. But this Convenience ſhould not yet hinder us from Planting alſo in other Places, where it may be expedient for the Good of our Affaires; and ſuch a Place we have in our Eye, where no Perſon as yet Inhabits, which we have now in our Power to Seize upon, and where the greateſt Commerce might be Eſtabliſhed, that has been yet known in the World, (Where this Place is ſhall be declared in fit ſeaſon) So that it is our Part now, not to let ſo many favourable Concurrences ſlip through our fingers, and to looſe the Benefit of ſo fair an Occaſion. We are apt to admire the good Fortune of our Neighbours, and it deſerves it. But 'tis not enough barely to admire, unleſs we alſo emulat it; Eſpecially, having ſo many Encouragments to promiſe our ſelves a Succeſs at leaſt Equal, if not Superior to any, that have gone before us. Beſides there is a great part of the World that remains ſtill unknown, Vaſt Regions that are not yet diſcovered: So that although others have had the good Fortune to have preceded us, we may yet have the Honour to carry the Buſines further than they have done. But as it ſeems neceſſary for the bringing of this great deſign to Effect, that we ſhould follow the Example of other People in forming a Company among our ſelves forming a Company among our ſelves for the Navagation of the Eaſt Indies, and that we muſt needs do the Hollanders this Right to acknowledge, that their Society is both the Richeſt and the beſt Road in the Myſtery of that Commerce of all; that have ever meddled with it. It will not be amiſſe to look into the Conſtitution of that Company, and the manner of their Proceedings, that any man may the better Judge, whether we have any Reaſon or no, to doubt of doing as much, as they have done before us.

THe Warr betwixt Spain and Holland, having ruined one Part of the Hollanders Commerce, without which they would have had much ado to ſubſiſt. Certain Merchants of Zealand Aſſociated among themſelves in the Year 1592. To go and Trade in the Eaſt-Indies; and particularly in ſuch places, where the Portuguez had nothing to do: but to avoid the Hazard of being too near the Line, they reſolved to ſearch a Paſſage toward the North, and ſo to Coaſt about Tartary and Cathay, and from thence to fall into China, and the Indies. This Voyage not ſucceeding to their wiſh, they joyned themſelves afterwards with ſome Merchants of Amſterdam, and altogether Equipp'd a ſmall Fleet of four Veſſels, which they ſent forth to India by the Ordinary way, under the Command of one Cornelius Houtman, who having lived long at Lisbon, had learned from the Portuguez the Secret of this Navigation. In 1595 they departed, and at the end of two Years and four Months, returned, without making any Profit of their Voyage. This little diſappointment did not hinder them from forming at the ſame time a ſecond Company, in the ſame Town of Amſterdam; and theſe two Companies being United, ſet forth a Fleet of eight Ships, that went out in 1598. While a third Company in Zealand were making ready for the ſame Deſign. In the Year 1559, certain other Merchants chants of Amſterdam (the moſt part of them Brabanders framed yet another Company apart from all the reſt, which ſent alſo four Veſſels to the Indies. In 1600, this latter Company ſet out two more, which joyned themſelves to ſix other of the firſt Company; and theſe eight Ships being gone, the Members of theſe two Companies not waiting for their Return, Equipp'd thirteen Veſſels, (the firſt Company nine, and the latter four;) and this Fleet went to Sea in April 1601, putting the Profits of the firſt Voyage, into a Stock for a ſecond Equipage, There were at that time, ſome Merchants of Roterdam and North-Holland, that were Modelling of Companies ſeparat from the reſt (which encreaſing in this manner, gave greatly to fear that one would ſpoile the other;) whereupon the States foreſeeing what diſorder this Diviſion might cauſe, perſwaded them to unite all their Intereſt, and to ſend their Deputies to the Hague to endeavour there to draw them all into one Company, in which Propoſition the Parties concerned did acquieſce, and ſo there was conſtituted one General Company for the Eaſt-Indian Navigation, with a Grant or Priviledge from the States, expreſly Inhibiting all other the Inhabitants of the United Provinces, to Traffique in the Indies from the Cape of Good Hope, to the furtheſt part of China, from the Term of One and twenty Years, to begin from the 20*th*. of March 1602. By this Grant, it was left free for all Perſons whatſoever to Enter themſelves into the Company, for what Sum they pleas'd, Provided, that they declared themſelves within five Months; after which, no more ſhould be received upon what Terms ſoever. In this ſpace of time, they gathered together a Fond or Stock, of Six millions, and Six hundred thouſand Livers, Money of the Country (which make ſeven Millions, nine hundred and twenty thouſand Livers of France) and no man ſince that, has been taken anew into the Company, at leaſt without having bought bought the ſhare of ſome of the firſt Intereſſed, which they call BUYING OF AN ACTION. There were made alſo diverſe Rules, for the Maintaining of Order and preſerving the Intereſt of each particular, which were Explained in the Grant. In the mean while, the firſt Term expiring in March 1623, it was continued for One and twenty Years longer, and in 1643, renewed again for 27 Years, in Conſideration of a Million and Six hundred thouſand Livres given to the State; and they are now Solliciting to renew their Priviledge again for a further Term.

The firſt Sum of Six Millions, and Six Hundred Thouſand Livers was Employed upon the Equipping of a Fleet of Fourteen Sail, that ſet out in February, 1603. and after that, of Another of Thirteen that departed in the December following. Till then, the Perſons Intereſſed, made no benefit at all of their Adventure, for being divided into ſo many private Companies, they were fain to lay out all their Gains upon a Stronger Equipage. But upon the Return of theſe two Fleets, the Profit was ſo great, that in 1605, the Company got ſifteen, for a hundred, and in 1606, ſeventy five for a hundred. So that in this ſhort time, they wanted but ten in the hundred of Re-imburſing themſelves their Original Sum. In this interim, the Company did not ſlacken at all in their Preparations, and Proviſions. They Treated with the Indian Kings, built Fortreſſes, and every where enlarged their Conqueſts, which vaſt Expences notwithſtanding, it appeared in May 1613, that every man was Re-imburſed his Principal, and had over and above, a hundred and ſiexy, Profit. As for Example; He that in 1602, put four thouſand Franks into the Stock of the Company, had received in 1613, ten thouſand and four hundred profit, and yet his Original Good in the Common-ſtock. And this Gain has been ſo much Augmented ſince that time, that there are few Years, wherein they get leſs than 30 per Cent. In 1661, they gained 40. In 1662, there was no distribution at all, by reason of four Ships lost, which they have never heard of since; beside the extraordinary Charge they were at, for the Seige of Cochin; but in 1663, they had 30 again per Cent.

The Company at every ten years end makes a General Inventory of the whole Business, and by That, which was made in 1661, it was found to be in Possession of the Immense Wealth above-mentioned.

This Company has not only Enriched Particulars, but the Advantages, which the Body of the Re-publick draws continually from it, are almost inestimable. In the first Place Commodities that are brought from the Indies into the States, Ports, pay at least seven in the hundred, and before they come into France, are unladen in Holland, where they pay all their Rights of In and Out (before they come to us) arising to six per Cent. and one per Cent. more for the Duties of Convoy, which seven per Cent. go clear to the Re-publick, beside two in the hundred more for Factorage; and the Charge of Merchandizes: So that upon this Reckoning, we pay twelve per Cent. more for Indian Commodities, than they would Cost us, if we fetched them our Selves. Whence it follows, that our Negotiants, making the same Profit of these Merchandises, which the Holland Company does, might be able to furnish us at twelve in the hundred better Cheap, than Others; because we should save the Duties, that are now paid in Holland; an Expense that every Year draws vast Sums out of France, where are consumed at least a third Part of what the Hollanders bring out of the Indies.

A second Advantage, which the States draw from this Company, is, that upon every Renewing of their Grant, it makes them a Considerable Present. The Last (as we have said already) amounting to no less than sixteen hundred thousand Livers.

In the third Place, it maintains at least fourscore thousand Men

Men, the greater Part whereof would otherwiſe be a Burthen to the State.

The laſt, and the moſt important Conſideration is, that this Company, in weakning the Commerce of the Portuguez, who were a long time under the Obedience of his Catholick Majeſty, did alſo weaken the Spaniſh Monarchy (their great Enemy) and by that Means made their way to a Peace.

The Equipp every year for this Voyage twelve fair Ships; from eight Hundred, to fourteen Hundred Tun, which depart at ſeveral Seaſons; and every year preciſely at the end of June, they return as many, or thereabouts. The Company, and the States uſuall in the Month of May ſend out their Men of War to meet them, partly as a Convoy, and to defend them againſt their Enemies, and partly to relieve them with Freſh Men, and other Neceſſaries, as they have occaſion. The Principal Place, which this Company has in the Indies is called Batavia, a Town that they have built in the Iſland of Java Major, not far from Sumatra, they have there their Magazins, & Stores of all the Commodities, which they bring into Europe, from the ſeveral Countries of the Indies, of Japan, of China, and of Other Kingdoms. They have alſo Colombo in the Iſle of Ceylon, which they have lately taken from the Portuguez (this Iſland furniſhes the whole World with Cinamome,) In Fine, they poſſeſs divers other Places, even from the Gulph of Perſia, to the Extremity of China, and they have Reckoned a good while ſince, ſeven and thirty Magazins, and twenty conſiderable Forts, which they had in the Indies.

For the greater Advantage and Liberty of their Commerce, they have their Agents about all the Kings of thoſe Quarters, as the King of Perſia, the great Mogol, the Kings of China, Japan, Cochinchine, and divers Others. See now to what degree of Greatneſs this Company is Arrived: a Society of Particular Merchants, low enough at Firſt, both in Fortune, and every way elſe; but now Advanced, not only beyond their Hopes, but their very Pretences.

But there is not any thing which a Company, of this Condition, by Union, Conduct and Courage may not accompliſh. This Truth being ſo clear, and the ſame Advantages now offered us, ſhal we not make uſe of them; Or ſhal we rather acknowledge to the World, that we want Unity, Addreſs, or Courage? The laſt is a Reproach, which our very Enemies will never faſten upon us; Nor with any Colour of Reaſon will it be pretended, that we want Addreſs. For (to ſpeak in this Place only of Navigation) it is certain, that better Seamen cannot be deſired than ours are, and the Hollanders know that well enough, who make uſe of the French more than of any other Nation, and find themſelves better ſerved with them, than with their own. As to the Point of Union (not to diſſemble the Matter) without doubt, we are there to blame, and 'tis a fault of our Nation, which certainly deſerves our greateſt Care to Redreſs. To ſay the Truth What a ſhame is it, that the French; the People of all the World the moſt accompliſh'd, a Nation with whom Valour, Magnificence, Good-Nature, Civility, Learning, the Liberal Arts ſeem in a Manner to have choſen their Abode. That theſe People, I ſay, ſhould be ſo hardly brought to endure One Another: that their Societies ſhould be ſo unconſtant, their Agreement ſo difficult; that the moſt hopeful Affairs in the World ſhould periſh even in their Hands, by I know not what Fatality of this Lightneſs; without which diſcord among themſelves, it were almoſt impoſſible to reſiſt them.

When the Hollanders began their Company, how many were there even of an Ordinary Condition, that ſold themſelves to their very Houſhold-Stuffe for the furniſhing of a Stock to begin withal; becauſe of the Honour, and Benefit which they foreſaw, would accrue to their Countrey. And ſhall the French having ſo many other Excellent Qualitie fail at last in so material Points, as to be wanting for their Zeal and Duty to the Glory and well-being of the Publique. I dare promise my self this will never be; and since we are now in an Age of Wonders, that must give Remedies to all our Evils, and renew our whole Frame: Let us not leave the least Mark of that Ancient Blemish; but by a constant Kindness among our Selves, and a true and dutiful Love of our Countrey give the World to know, that our great and incomparable Prince has influenced his People, and inspired them with a Virtue, which they never had before.

But what shall we do then? will some say? Our Business in the first place, must be (as is already said) to Compose a Society of diverse Persons, that will unanimously contribute to the Execution of our Design; which Society shall carry the Name of the French Company for the Commerce of the East Indies.

Our next Work must be to Equip a Fleet, and to go directly, and make a Descent upon our Island of Madagascar which we may do without any Resistance, and being there with a considerable Establishment, which from time to time shall be supported, and maintained by strong Colonies.

We must then resolve to carry thither, only men of Honesty and Courage, not Criminals redeemed from the Gibbet, or the Gallows, nor Women condemned for Debauchery of Lewdness. Part of these People shall be Employed in Tilling the Ground, (which will be a matter of exceeding Benefit) while the Rest shall be making themselves Masters of the Principal Posts of the Country, and securing of Ports, whereof there are diverse in this Island, capable of Two or Three Hundred Vessels, to Ride without danger. Thus much for the Præliminaries of our great Commerce.

I know very well, that this Proposition will not please all People, and some will tell you perhaps, that the French have been at Madagascar already ; and What did they there? They will tell you too, that Monsieur Flacourt, (who was the Director of the Company, that was then made,) has sufficiently manifested the Vanity of this Project ; in a Relation that he has published upon this Subject. Well ! But are we now to learn, that a Business, that has Miscarried at One time, may succeed at Another? How many great Enterprizes, do we find in Story, that have Required several Tryals to bring them to Perfection. The First Spaniards, that Planted in the Isles of America, were all slain ; and yet this disaster did not discourage the Undertakers from sending more. The English Collonies in Virginia have been four or five times destroyed ; and yet this has not made them Abandon the Country. To come once again to the Example of the Hollanders. The First step, they set toward their Indian Adventure (endeavouring to find out a new Passage) was most unfortunat to them. The Second time, 'tis true, they got thither, but they made nothing of their Voyage. Did they give it over for that ? No, by no Means, they returned a Third, a Fourth Time, and at last gathered with Interest the Fruits of their ~~Preservance~~ perseverance. But this is not all neither, for the World must know, that there is a large difference, betwixt the Business of Monsieur Flacourt, and That which is now in Question. A large Difference, betwixt a Company composed of a small Number of privat persons, and that wanted Stock for the Accomplishment of so great a Design, and the Company, which is Now in Proposal to be Erected. For after all; we are not without hope, that the King himself, (who has so great an Affection, and Tenderness for his People) considering the Notable Benefits, which this Enterprize will bring to his Dominions, will Himself I say, lend his Royal Support, and rather than fail, even enter into a Participation in the Design : So that the Consequence betwixt twixt Monſieur Flacourts Affair; and This at preſent, holds no Proportion. And this muſt be acknowledged toosthat (the Miſfortune notwithſtanding, into which he was caſt, by the Fault of the Company) he has been ever known to ſay; nay, and publickly to Declare, and Print at the End of his Relation before Mentioned, that a conſiderable Settlement in Madagaſcar (which muſt muſt be vigorouſly begun, and watchfully purſued) would bring an advantage to the State of France beyoud Imagination: conſidering the Goodneſs and fertility of the Coutrey, the Gentle and Induſtrious Diſpoſition of the People, and the commodious Situation of the Iſland for the Entertainment of Commerce. And this which we deliver is Supported by the agreeing Teſtimoney of ſo many Nations, newly come from thence; as Flemmins, French, Hollanders, Engliſh; that to diſpute the Point, were to offer Violence to Truth it ſelf. Monſieur Flacourt did not ſo much as wiſh for more, than one luſty Ship to be ſent every Year from France to Madagaſcar. to carry on the Deſigne. What are we to expect then, that propoſe no leſs than Fourteen or Fifteen at a Blow? The Tranſporting of Five hundred Men thither was the very utmoſt of his Deſire, but we ſpeak of carrying as many Thouſands. The Diſburſement of a Hundren and Fifty Thouſand Livres upon an Equipage, was a Sum that he had not the Confidence ſo much as to propoſe; but we have in our proſpect, the Expenſe of many Millions In a Word, his Reaſonings were proportioned to the Abilities of a Company of Privat Perſons; but we ſpeak of Erecting a Company, whereof it's poſſible, that His Majeſty Himſelf will not diſdain to be a Member; and by His Royal Participation, influence it with a certain Character, peculiar to the Dignity of ſuch a Conſtitution. So that the Odds betwixt our Modell, and his is Evident, and that we ſhall be able to carry our Buſineſs higher than ever we could have have raiſed his Imagination. But let that go as it will; of the Iſle of Madagaſcar a Man may ſafely ſay, that that with a very little care to Fortifie there, we may have not only one Place, but many, and thoſe of greater Value, than all that the Hollanders can pretend to be Maſters of in the Indies; take it either in regard of the Place it ſelf, or the Convenience of Traffique. ſurely it cannot be denyed to be Incomparably more Commodious and ſafe, than Batavia in the Iſle Java, where the Hollanders have pitcht their Principal Reſidence. More Commodious doubtleſs it is, as being in a Gentle-Climat, and having within it ſelf whatſoever may honeſtly ſerve either to the Pleaſures, or Neceſſities of Humane life. Whereas on the contrary, there is ſcarce any thing to be gotten about Batavia; but the Company is fain to fetch from a far off the very Rice, Meat, and neceſſary Proviſions for five and twenty, or thirty thouſand Perſons, to their great Trouble and Expenſe. And then Madagaſcar is certainly a ſafer Place; for the Natives of Java, are a Brutal, Bold, Warlike, and ſtubborn People: by Profeſſion Mahometan, and conſequently haters and deſpiſers of Chriſtians. The Hollanders have for their Neighbour, on the one ſide the King of Mataran, a Prince, that ſhews himſelf now and then at their very Gates, with a Hundred thouſand men. On the other ſide they have the People of Bantam, (a matter of twelve Leagues from Batavia) who have often done the ſame as the King of Mataran. Whereas the Inhabitants of Madagaſcar, on the contrary, are of a meek and quiet Humour, diſcovering withal a ſingular Inclination to receive the Goſpel; ſo that one is more ſecure with a hundred Men in Madagaſcar, than with above a thouſand in Java. But this is not all yet, that the Place is more delightful and ſecure, but it lies much better alſo for Traffique: for I cannot but take notice of another Inconvenience which the Hollanders ſuffer,

in having their General Magazin at Batavia; it lies so far up in the Indies, that it makes their Voyages long and dangerous, and a great part of them to no purpose. When you have brought them within view of Madagascar, they have still a third part of their way further to Batavia; and when they are there, they must come back again the same way they went, and with the same Winds that would carry them into Europe; only to Traffique in the Gulf of Bengala, upon the Coasts of Coromandel, and Malabar, at Ceylon, Surat, in the Persian Gulf, and upon the Coasts of Ethiopia; and after all this, they must back again with their Merchandize to Batavia, and there at last they make their Cargasons for Holland. So that the very Situation of the Place, gives them the Trouble of passing the same way two or three times over, whereas by Planting our principal Magazin at Madagascar, all this doubling would be saved: for being there once, let us go which way we will, either toward the Red Sea, the Gulf of Bengala, China, Japan, or the most remote Islands, we are never out of our way; but when we shall have made our Markets, and carried our Commodities to Madagascar, every hour of our Passage will have brought us so much nearer home, so that we shall have nothing to stop us but foul Weather; none of this back and forward, this Turning and Crossing to make the way tedious. Take this along with you too, that when you are once at Madagascar, you are upon as good a Breathing-Place as you would wish, with all Conveniencies about you, to refresh your men, and follow your Course at Pleasure: whereas the Hollanders, after they are once under way from Batavia, meet with no such Relief betwixt that and home: (commonly a seven Months Voyage) for want of which, they are so miserably Harrassed with the Journey, that a long time it takes them to recover it. And there remains yet another Inconvenience; (from which we are Exempt)

hat is, when they are come into our Seas, they dare not pass the Channel for fear of the English with whom they are at Variance, upon the very Point of the Indian-Trade; but away they go on still to the Northward, and so about Ireland, and Scotland (a Matter of four or five hundred Leagues Compass) to fall at last into their own Country by the way of the German-Ocean (which is the true reason of the Companies allowing an Augmentation of three Months Pay, to all the Officers and Sea-men upon this Voyage, above their ordinary Wages;) so that they have both Extremities of Heat and Cold to encounter in their Return. And we are now to presume, that the Company puts upon Accompt all these Rubs and Stops in the way, which make the Navigation both more hazardous and expensive, and Rate their Commodities accordingly. This is enough said I suppose, to prove the Situation of Madagascar, better than that of Java, and consequently that the Matter in hand is worth our care.

To instance now in our own Nation, the French make no difficulty at all to adventure upon the American Isles, as St. Christopher, Martinique, Guadalupe, and others (where there are at least thirty thousand Persons) and yet these are Places, where there is no living without Succour from Abroad; and if the English, and Hollanders with whom they Traffique, should not supply them with Bread, Wine and Victuals; nay and with Slaves too, to order their Grounds, they were not able to subsist two years to an end, without extream Misery; which would enforce them at least to quit their Hold. From hence it proceeds, that the English and Hollanders get away all their Sugar, Tobacco and Indigo, with which they furnish us afterward, at a dear Rate; so that the French are they that reap the least Benefit of their own Labours. Taking this for granted, what can be clearer, than that we are under a Gross, and most unreasonable Prejudice, in rather chusing chuſing to ſend out Colonies into Places, ſubjected to ſuch inconveniencies, than to Plant a Large and Fruitful Iſland, fitted with all Advantages, both for Plenty, Pleaſure, and Commerce: And all this, becauſe Monſieur Flacourt failed in the buſineſs; becauſe a matter of a hundred, or ſix ſcore Men miſcarried in it. (even by the fault of the very Company it ſelf) Theſe People ſhould do well to obſerve, that we are now upon another manner of Deſign, upon an Enterprize not unworthy of that great Prince, who will have the Goodneſs to make Himſelf of the Party.

I muſt expect now to be Queſtioned, by what Authority I talk at this Rate, and who made me an Undertaker? Truly, I ſhall not take upon me beyond my Commiſſion; but I think it may be very fairly preſumed, that ſo accompliſhed a Prince as his Chriſtian Majeſty, will never refuſe to Comfort, and Protect his People in an Affair of this Weight; or ever fall ſhort of that Affection, which the Kings of England have conſtantly manifeſted toward their Subjects upon the like Occaſion. A Man may ſay indeed, that his Majeſties daily Acts are a Security to the Contrary; and he that ſhal conſider, that ſince the year 1658, the King has ſtruck off twenty Millions a year in Taxes, and ſince that, brought down the price of Salt: How that in the ſcarcity of 1661, (which threatned us with an inevitable Famine) he did out of his proper Coffers provide for the Importation of Prodigious Quantities of Grain, to relieve the Neceſſities of his People, and particularly of Paris, where the Number made the Evil the more dangerous. He I ſay, that ſhal duly Conſider, what we have both ſeen, and taſted of this Kind, will never doubt of his Majeſties Propenſion to further the Advancement of this Company to all purpoſes Imaginable.

If there were nothing elſe of Inducement in the thing, it would be ſufficient alone to prevail upon his Majeſty to ſee that the Eſtabliſhment of this Great and Noble Commerce, by opening an honeſt and certain Way of Livelyhood to the whole French Nation for the Future, would inſenſibly wear out, and baniſh all theſe Ignoble and ſhifting ways of Living, which in our days have been but too much in practice and Credit. That this happy Abundance would bring us again to a Sincerity in our dealings, and put out of Countenance that Trade of Wrangling, which the inſatiable Greedineſs of a Lazy ſort of Men has raiſed to the higheſt Degree of *I*niquity. That it will be a ſure way of Employment for thoſe that languiſh for want of Buſineſs, whoſe *I*nduſtrey is as good as loſt when it is not exerciſed. And in Concluſion, that it will be an indubitable Relief to a World of Poor; who have at preſent no other Choice, than either a ſhameful Beggery: or ſome Criminal Courſe to deliver themſelves from it. So that ſince the Thing in Queſtion, has no leſs an Influence upon the Intereſt and Honour of the State, than upon the Profit of Particular Perſons: We may be confident of his Majeſties Royal Favour and Aſſiſtance toward the Accompliſhment of ſo Glorious, and Beneficial a Work.

TO come to the Point then, there muſt be firſt a Fond, or Stock, of ſix Millions to be laid out upon the Equipage of twelve, or fourteen fair Ships of burden, from eight Hundred, to fourteen Hundred Tun, for the Convenience of paſſing ſuch a Number of Perſons into our Iſle of Madagaſcar, as may take Poſſeſſion of it in a handſom Faſhion.

I would here propoſe that his Majeſty might be humbly beſought, to put in for a tenth Part, and I perſwade my ſelf it might be readily obtained.

I am further aſſured, that there are divers Perſons of Eminent Condition in this Kingdom, that would be willing to venture Conſiderable *S*ums upon this Bottom, in caſe the Merchants, who ſhall firſt Aſſociat toward this Conſtitution, ſhal think it convenient. And in this caſe, I reckon upon three Millions, as good as raiſed; ſo that we are Advanced the One Half already. And for the Other Moyety, I would recommend it to all Merchants, Burgers of Towns, and in a more eſpecial Manner to all that love the Honour of their Country, and deſire the Laudable Advancement of their proper Fortunes, to bethink themſelves ſeriouſly of the Buſineſs, and to make their Zeal as Remarkable to the preſent Age, as the Reward of it will Render them in their Generations to Poſterity.

For their further encouragement, I have great reaſon to believe, that his Majeſty, after his engagement for a Tenth in the firſt Expedition, will be prevailed with to furniſh more for the Second, Third, and Fourth, if it ſhal be thought needful.

His Majeſty may be alſo ſupplicated to remit to this Company, the One Half of his Rights of Entry & Cuſtoms, throughout all France, for all Indian Commodities Imported thither.

In fine, upon a ſtrong Preſumption, that the King will ſhew himſelf in this, as in all other Caſes, the Father of His People: I flatter my ſelf with a ſtrange Hope, that His Majeſty may be perſwaded to take upon Himſelf, the Riſque of the firſt eight or ten Years, which if it comes to paſs, let the world Judge by that ſignal Engagement, how His Majeſty ſtands Affected to this Affair, and whether the Opinion, which I have entertained concerning it, be not ſomewhat more than the Viſion of a Man, that dreams waking.

As for Privat Perſons, they ſhal have Liberty to Intereſt themſelves in the Company for what Sum they pleaſe, till the Stock ſhal be Compleat; after which no more ſhal be Admitted: And for the ſpeedier Raiſing of the Sum, His Majeſty ſhal be deſired, that Strangers (as to that Particular) may have the ſame Freedom with French men themſelves; by vertue whereof they ſhal ſtand Naturalized, without need of any other Grace; Provided that their Engagement exceed the Sum of ten Thouſand Livres, in conſideration of which Intereſt, their Kindred, although Strangers, ſhal be qualified to inherit their Eſtates. And for further Security, His Majeſty muſt be deſired to Grant, that in caſe of any Rupture betwixt this Crown and the States, whereof ſuch Strangers ſhal be Subjects, their Goods ſhal not thereupon be Seized or Confiſcated, in Conſequence of the War.

This Company ſhal then have its Directors; and to take away all Jealouſie from the Negotiants, of being One oppreſſed by Another, theſe Directors ſhal be choſen out of the Body of the Merchants only, and the whole Stock put into the Hands of One Perſon to be named on their Part. And for the greater Encouragement of Strangers, and in Teſtimony of the Truſt, that ſhal be repoſed in them, they ſhal be declared Capable of being Heads and Directors of the Company; provided, that they bring in an Intereſt Correſpondent thereunto, and ſettle in France with their Families.

The King muſt be ſupplicated again to permit, that the Cauſes of the Company may in the Firſt Place be brought before the next Conſulary Juſtice, and by Appeal to the Parliament.

In fine, every man ſhal be free to Offer his Advice for the Good of the Company: or, for the Security of any of the Perſons therein concerned: and his Opinion ſhal be received with Reſpect, and followed ſo far as ſhal be found Expedient. I have now delivered my Thoughts upon this Subject, which have not been hitherto unacceptable, where ever I have imparted them.

But Fear and Diſtruſt (thoſe two Ignoble Paſſions, and the Enemies of all great Undertakings,) will perhaps have the Power to work upon ſome eaſie Natures, by their ill grounded and miſtaken Reaſons; which (ſuch as they are) we ſhal frankly lay open, for the ſervice of thoſe who otherwiſe might poſſibly ſuffer themſelves to be ſurprized.

The

The First Objection is drawn from the Ordinary Uncertainty of Events, which is the great Common Place of such as want Resolution, who will tell you, that A Man can have no Assurance, that this new Navigation, will ever come to what we Imagine; That Our Neighbours being already in Possession of the Indian Commerce, where they are powerfully Settled, and Rooted in Familiarities with the Natives, with whom they Trade, it will be a hard matter to bring them over to us: And that in fine, being before-handed, and having great Magazins, and Stores, they will appoint their Factors perchance to beat down the Market, and under-sell us: So that we shal be quickly reduced either to throw off all, or Trade to Loss. All this is easily Answered, and we will do it in Order.

As to the first Objection, I reckon that it can never enter into the thought of a man of Courage. Have our Neighbours prospered in this Navigation, even beyond their Hopes, and is it a reasonable Question to ask, whether we shall succeed or no? It is without dispute, a Point of false Prudence to doubt it. How seldom is this same froward Wisdom in the Right, which requires more certainty than the thing will bear, that would have the Future in hand, and cannot content it self with a well-grounded Probability? This was it that made so many of the Christian Princes to reject the Proposition of the Famous Columbus, of which notwithstanding, they saw afterwards the Effects to their Amazement (the first that boggled at the Design being the Genoeses) he discoursed the Business to the King of Portugal, but he had as good have said nothing: and to as little purpose was the Project broken to the King of England, and to the French King too: (as some say) and the Favourable Audience that he had of Ferdinand, and Isabel, would have signified just as much as the rest, if a privat man had not born the Charge of his first Expedition, by the Advance of sixteen thousand Gold Ducats, that were employed employed upon it. The King of Spain has the ſame Obligation alſo, for the Diſcovery of Peru to three privat Perſons that joyned in the Deſign, which paſſed a while for an Extravagant Folly, till the Event made it appear to be an Act of Profound Wiſdom. In the mean time, the Difference we here ſpeak of, was not without ſome plauſible Appearance of Reaſon; the thing being as then in doubt; but with us 'tis another Caſe. The Gain is certain, and the good Fortune which others have had there already, tells us what we our ſelves are now to expect. In one word, if our Deſign miſcarry, 'tis our own Fault, and we cannot ſay, that the Execution of it is not in our own hands, without offence to Truth and Honour at once.

As to the ſecond Objection, which concerns the Vent of our Merchandize, the Conceit is idle. For firſt, the Company may be ſure of France; becauſe (as we have proved already) they may afford their Commodities at ten or twelve in the Hundred, better Cheap than the Hollanders, (which riſes to more than a man would imagine, till he comes to Compute, that France alone conſumes at leaſt a third Part of what is brought out of India.) But beſides, it will not enter into my underſtanding, why Strangers ſhould not as ſoon buy of its, as of our Neighbours; eſpecially, when their Intereſt leads them to it; France being placed in the very heart of Europe, and Acceſſible on every ſide. I ſhall ſay more, which is, that ſince Strangers are already under an Obligation with us, for four principal Commodities, which we have in Excellence, (and which an Italian of great Authority, call the four Load-ſtones, that draw other Nations to us) that is to ſay, Corn, Wine, Salt and Hemp; there is no doubt, but they that Traffique with us for theſe things, would be very well content to take off our Indian Merchandize, as far as they have Occaſion for it all under one; which would be very ry much for the Merchants eaſe, to furniſh himſelf with whatſoever he can deſire, at one and the ſame Market; ſo that it is rational to believe, not only that our Indian Merchandize will not be left upon our hands, but that we ſhall have a quicker Sale for it, than other people; and by this means recover the great Traffique which France had of old, before the Portuguez found out the Navigation of the Eaſt-Indies: for in thoſe days, all the Perſian and Indian Merchandiſe, was brought by Land into Egypt, from thence by Sea to Marſeilles, and there diſtributed. In conſequence hereof, it is not unlikely, that our Neighbours whoſe beſt Card is their Commerſe, will try all the ways in the World to Croſs us. And this is the Foundation of the third Objection.

In truth it may very well be, and that they will not ſtick even to pick their own Pockets, rather than we we ſhall fill ours, and ſhew us a thouſand Tricks to make us ſick of our Buſineſs. It is poſſible, that for a while they will be content to ſet their Merchandize at an under Rate, to looſe a little at preſent, to get the more hereafter, and trifle away a Million or two upon the Experiment. But how long will this Frolick hold? Or can any man imagine, that to do us a Miſchief, they will reſolve abſolutely to Ruine themſelves? After all, the Conſideration how far they would expoſe themſelves upon this Deſign, to divert and diſcourage us ſerves only to confirm me in my firſt Opinion of it. They are not a People to do great things to no purpoſe, nor would they throw away ſo much Treaſure now, but in order to the Conſervation of their future Intereſt. Again, they would not ſtickle ſo hard for a ſmall Matter, and the very Induſtry they uſe to hinder our Commerce, proves the Benefit conſiderable if we carry it; ſo that this Objection is ſo far from moving us to relinquiſh our Enterprize, that on the other ſide, it raiſes both our Hopes and Reſolutions to go through with it. To say all in a word, if so great a Blessing does attend us, as His Majesties Consent, that all the Loss which shall befal the Company, for the first eight or ten Years, may be made good upon the Stock which His Majesty shall vouchsafe to venture in the Design. What have we then to fear? Can it be, that a Party of privat Merchants (for such are our Neighbours Companies) shall have the power to sink a Design, which one of the Greatest *P*rinces of the World, has a mind to support? A *P*rince, who by the admirable order of his Conduct, the just Administration of his Revenue, and by his fatherly Goodness toward his *P*eople, has put himself into a Condition, to undertake without fear, whatsoever may be put in Execution with Honour and Justice. No, no, our Neighbours are too wise to make so dangerous an Experiment! Let us say rather, that they shall see us take part of their Commerce, either with *P*leasure as their principal Allies, or however without having it in their power to harm us.

The second Scruple objected by some particulars, arises from the Consideration of certain unhappy Effects of our past Troubles. The prodigious *E*xpenses which the King was at, while he was forced to maintain a War in all the parts of Europe; (which has now brought us however to the most glorious Constitution that the State of France ever enjoyed) those Expenses I say, having obliged His Majesty to call for Supplies of Money, now and then from his *P*eople, have left in them certain dark Imaginations and Jealousies, that the Stock of the Company being a publick Treasure, upon the Kings next occasion, His Majesty might perchance Seize it as His own; so that it would be a madness for privat *P*ersons to venture their *F*ortunes in a Bottom, which the King may make himself Master of at *P*leasure. But these are weak Heads God knows, and that they say, ſay, is certainly unworthy, both of the Proſperity of our Affairs, and the Magnamity of our Prince.

The King they ſay, may perchance lay hand upon the Companies Stock, becauſe 'tis Publick Money. But I ſay that the King will never do it: for that very Reaſon, His Majeſty has heretofore had great Wars upon his Hands, his Treaſury Drained, and his Finances Miſ-managed, to the great dis-ſatisfaction of his People; but in the middle of this preſſing Neceſſity, can any man ſay, that the King ever fingered any of the Publick Money: was His Majeſty ever known to Order the Receiver of Conſignations to empty his Coffers in the hands of His Treaſurers? Never had any Creature ſuch a thought. For the Publick Treaſure is a kind of Sacred Truſt, and it were a ſort of Sacriledge to abuſe it. Why ſhould any man ſuſpect the King capable of ſo prophane a Violence? And that he ſhould take that now too, when his Coffers are full, which in his greateſt Wants, he ever made a Conſcience to meddle with? But it will be ſaid again, that the World is uncertain, and all that is in it, and that the greateſt Felicity imaginable cannot warrant it ſelf from Misfortune. This is true, and I think no man will diſpute the Humour and Caprice of Fortune; but let us judge of things by probability (if not, by ſomewhat more ſubſtantial.) We ſee, that moſt of our Neighbours have their hands full at home; others are weak, and thoſe whom we have found formerly moſt to be feared, are now well enough ſatisfied to be at peace with us. Let us conſider on the other hand, the Power of our Prince, and the unmoveable Foundations of that Power. In his Menage of Affairs of State, His Majeſty is Aſſiduous and Indefatigable. As to the Ordering of his Finances, he looks after it himſelf, and underſtands the whole Buſineſs of his Revenue no man better. If we turn our thoughts now toward thoſe Bleſſings which Heaven hath ſhowered upon his Royal Perſon, that clearneſs of Wit, ſolidity of Judgment, vigour of Body, Health, Youth; We have reaſon to believe, (if we may believe any thing in this World) that our good Fortune will be long lived, and that God will reward his Royal Piety, and Juſtice, with a Reign as laſting as happy, and not to refuſe His Chriſtian Majeſty, a Grace which Heaven has ſometime beſtowed even upon Pagan Princes, and Conferred upon the Reign of Auguſtus. Away then with this lewd Diſtruſt, that Embitters all our Delights, and troubles our Heads with the Apprehenſion of Evils, which are never likely to concern us. Let it never be imagined, that a Prince ſo Generous and Juſt, after the ſolemn Eſtabliſhment of a Company, under the Seal of his Authority, can ever have the thought to invade the Eſtates of privat Perſons, putting themſelves under his Protection, and by ſo foul a Violence to blaſt the Glory of his Unſpotted Reputation. In a word, let not any man think that His Majeſties flouriſhing Condition, can ever be reduced to ſtand in need of ſo hateful an Expedient, and after that, ſo Unprofitable. For in fine, (to leave this Opinion nothing to ſay for it ſelf) I dare affirm, that if the King both wanted Money, and had a mind to ſeize it, the Eſtate of the Company would be yet ſecure. For let us look into Holland, and we ſhall find wherein the Wealth of theſe Companies conſiſts: 'tis true, they have a world of Merchandize diſpoſed of up and down in their Magazines, both in India and Europe, they have their Shipping, their Canon, and their neceſſary Equipages; but for Money, alas, 'tis the leaſt part of the Riches; and indeed their Caſh, compared with the reſt, is ſcarce conſiderable. Now I pray you tell me, were it not a pleaſant Project for a King of France that had need of Money, to make Seizure of all theſe Commodities, and that at three or four hundred Leagues diſtance for the great part. Put caſe that he were to raiſe an Army to prevent an Invaſion, and wanted Money upon that pinch, or to pay off ſome mutinous Troups; were it not a ready way think ye, to ſend a Matter of a hundred or ſixſcore Wagons, to the Houſe of the Indian Company for ſo many Load of Cinnamon, and Nutmegs? Do Princes uſe to pay their Souldiers with Baggs of Pepper and Cloves? No! no, in ſuch Caſes this will never do their Buſineſs. In a State of War there muſt be Money in kind, and not that which makes Money in a time of Peace. Wherefore ſince the Eſtates of this Company will not ly in Caſh, which is the only thing, that Princes at ſome times may have occaſion for, it is manifeſt that this Apprehenſion of the Authority-Royal is nothing elſe, but a Chimera ſet up to oppoſe the growing Proſperity of this Nation.

There is another ſort of People yet more unreaſonable; but we ſhall anſwer them with the reſt, and they'l tell ye, (taking every thing at worſt) that we are not ſure to be always at peace with our Neighbours, and if there ſhould happen a War, how much the Companies Shipping would be expoſed to the Enemy, for they make a great Queſtion, whether the State of France would ever concern themſelves ſo far in the Quarrel, as their Neighbours do upon the like occaſion: for ſay they, Traffique being the Chief, and almoſt the only Support of our Neighbours, it is their Intereſt to maintain their Commerce with their Lives and Fortunes: whereas France that lives upon it ſelf, and has within it ſelf ſo ſure a Bottom of Strength and Subſiſtence, will not think it ſelf much the Poorer for the Loſs of a Merchants Fleet; ſo that the Kings Buſineſs will be to ſecure his Frontiers, and look to his Gariſons, without charging himſelf with Armado's to Protect us in our Trade. Sure theſe People do not heed what they ſay, for they confute themſelves with their own Objections. Do they confeſs, that our Neighbours in a Country not ſo good as France, have yet kept up their Trading againſt all Oppoſers; and do they now Queſtion, whether His Majeſty will uphold us in ours? What colour have they for a Perſwaſion, that the ſtronger ſhould not do that now, which they themſelves acknowledge to have been done already by the Weaker? Not that they make any doubt of the Kings Power, they'l tell ye; but perhaps there will not be ſo much Care taken as might be. They are Ignorant then it ſeems, or would be thought ſo, of what his Majeſty does every day. I do not ſpeak of his Univerſal Vigilance over all his Dominions; but of the ſpecial care he takes for the Protecting of his People in a Forreign Trade. They do not know! perceive, that it coſts the King at leaſt four Millions a year, to entertain a Liberty of Ordinary Commerce, both in the Eaſt and Weſtern Ocean. And that it is upon this Accompt, that his Majeſty is now at the Charge of a Navy Royal, to ſuppreſs the Corſares of Algiers: That it is, for this very End, that he Entertains another Squadron, to defend our Merchants from the Pirates of Gallicia. They are ſtrangers doubtleſs to all theſe things, without which, it were not poſſible they ſhould fall foul upon ſo groſs a Miſtake. Is it not known, that his Majeſty does all this, for the ſupport of a very Ordinary Traffique, and can any man Imagine, that he will do leſs for the Maintenance of ſo much a Greater, and more Honourable Commerce? No man can perſwade himſelf, that the King would refuſe the ſame Countenance and Aſſiſtance to the Intereſt of a Company, wherein the whole State is Concerned, which at this very day his Majeſty is pleaſed to allow in Favour of Particular Merchants. We have ſeen in times of War, what Pains has been taken for the Providing of our Frontiers; and a Battel fought ſome times, only to hinder the taking of a ſmal Town, or to ſecure a Paſs upon a River. Much more then will his Majeſty provide for the ſafety of a Fleet, that has the Prayers and

Wiſhes of all France engaged in the Venture. In a Word; if Intereſt and Honour be the moſt Powerful Motives of Human Reſolutions; and the two Poles upon which are turned the Affairs of Princes, as well as of Privat Perſons, there can be no Queſtion, but the King will Employ his Power upon all occaſions to preſerve the Company from danger. For, that it is his Majeſties Intereſt ſo to do, is clear; not only in regard of his Part in the Stock of the Company; but by reaſon of the infinite Number of Merchandizes, and Merchants that this Traffique will draw into the Kingdom, to the great Advantage of the Revenue of his Majeſties Farms, and Cuſtoms. So that a man may rationally compute, that The Profit of this Commerce, when it ſhal be once Eſtabliſhed, will be better to the King, than the two beſt Provinces in his Kingdom. Nor is it leſs manifeſt that His Majeſty is Engaged in Honour, than in Intereſt, ſince without Diſpute, it is a point of Honour for a Prince not to ſuffer his People, to be Cruſht in a Deſign undertaken by his Allowance, and Authority. So that to ask, if the King will vigorouſly maintain us both in Peace, and War, having ſo many Conſiderations to engage him to it, would be but a kind of ſenſeleſs, and unmannerly Queſtion. If Neceſſity, which many times forces great Actions from mean Perſons, has been able to produce thoſe fair Reſolutions, which we admire in our Neighbours: How much more ſhal the true Love of Glory and Juſtice operate upon the Souls of Princes. The firſt are carried on by a kind of Violence: The other govern their Actions by Choice and Reaſon. Thoſe at the beſt, are but wiſe enough to avoid Miſchiefs; but theſe are the Ordinary Inſtruments of our greateſt Good. Let us trouble our ſelves no further than about our Fleets, ſince they are under the Care of One of the beſt Princes of the Univerſe: and that miraculous Power, which ſubjects all other Powers to it ſelf, and attends him where ever he goes, ſhal influence ence our new Navigators, and protect them both against Enemies, and Storms. Neither let it be thought, that the Conqueſt which we ſhal make in his Name, will be leſs his Majeſties Care, than his other Poſſeſſions: or that he will ever endure to have his Lillies torn up, where ever they ſhal have taken Root. There is a certain inviſible Chain that Links together the ſeveral Parts of the World, though never ſo remote, when they belong to the ſame Maſter: So that 'tis not poſſible to ſhake the One, without Violence to the Other. It is then upon the Reſolution and Power of his Majeſty, that we may confidently Repoſe for the Iſſue of this Enterprize, which begining upon a time, when this Great Monarch is in effect the Arbitrator of all Europe; when all Princes make it their Buſineſs to preſerve his Friendſhip, and avoid his diſpleaſure. What Queſtion is to be made, but that the Reputation of his Greatneſs will carry good Fortune and Succeſs to our Colonies?

Join your ſelves then my Maſters, Join your ſelves my Generous Countrey-men in the purſuit of a Glorious Diſcovery, which has only been kept from you thus long, by our paſt Diſorders. A Diſcovery that ſhal lead you to Advantages not to be numbred, and which ſhal yet grow in the Hands of our Poſterity. A Diſcovery in fine, that ſhal carry the Fame and Terrour of your Arms into thoſe Quarters of the World, where the French Nation it ſelf was never heard of. No more therefore of theſe reproachful Jealouſies, which are ſo unworthy of your ordinary Courage and Vertue: but go on boldly under the Banner of the Invincible LEWIS, and be aſſured, that as the Awe and Reverence, which his Glorious Name Imprints upon other Nations, leaves you nothing to fear from Strangers: So from Himſelf, you are certain to receive all the Comforts of his Goodneſs, Munificence and Protection.

ARTICLES

Articles, and Conditions, Whereupon the Trading Merchants of this Kingdom do moſt humbly beſeech his Majeſty to grant them his Declaration, and the Graces therein contained, for the Eſtabliſhment of a Company for the Commerce of the Eaſt Indies.

Allowed.

XXVI.

That his Majeſty will be pleaſed to grant to the ſaid Company, the Power and Authority of ſettling Garriſons in all the places before mentioned, and in ſuch other as ſhall be Conquered or Built, conſiſting of what numbers the Company ſhall think neceſſary: and therein to put Arms, Canon and Ammunition; and to caſt Guns and other Arms in what place ſoever, and in what Quantity ſoever they ſhall think needful; with his Majeſties Arms imprinted upon them, and underneath them the Arms of the ſaid Company; which ſhall be Authorized to provide for the Safety of the ſaid places, as by them ſhall be thought Expedient. The Officers and Commanders of the ſaid places, to be totally dependent, and put in or out at the pleaſure of the ſaid Company; provided always, that they ſhall all ſwear Allegiance to the King, and after that, take a particular Oath to the ſaid Company, in Conſideration of Traffique and Commerce.

to

Allowed,

XXVII.

That his Majeſty ſhall vouchſafe to Authorize the ſaid Company, to ſend Ambaſſadours in his Majeſties Name to the King of India, and to Treat with them, either upon Peace or Truce, or even to declare War with them, and to do all other Acts which ſhall be deemed by the Company, to be for the Advantage of the ſaid Commerce.

Allowed.

XXVIII.

That the Directors of the Chamber-General and Particular, ſhall keep Regiſter-Books of all the Wages and Salaries which they ſhall give to their Officers, Servants, Clerks, Workmen, Souldiers and others; which Books ſhall be good Evidence in Court, and ſerve for the Deciſion of Queſtions, upon any Demand or Pretenſion againſt the ſaid Company.

Allowed.

XXIX.

That of all Differences that ſhall ariſe upon what Cauſe ſoever, concerning the ſaid Company, betwixt two or more Directors, or Intereſſed perſons, and any one Particular, touching the Affairs of the ſaid Company, the Circumſtances and Dependances ſhall be judged and determined by the Conſulary Juſtice, to the excluſion of all others, whereof the Sentences and Judgements ſhall be executed Soveraignly and without Appeall, as far as 1500 Livres; and in caſes of an higher Concern, the Judgements and Sentences ſhall be executed, notwithſtanding all Oppoſitions and Appeals whatſoever: The Appeal to be brought before the Ordinary Ordinary Judges that are properly to take Cognizance of the Matter: to which Effect, his Majesty shall be desired to Establish the Consulary Justice before spoken of, in the Town where it is not; and wheresoever else his Majesty shall find it necessary.

Allowed.

XXX.
